Nick comes to her daughter Alex's prom at school, and learns she's had problem, probably with her boyfriend, so now she's in the bathroom for an hour. Nick walks in, finds her cubicle, and standing by it, talks to her.Nick: Come on out. Let me see how you look, at least. Come on.Alex: [sobbing] I look like crap! I already took my hair out and everything.What Women Want, filmDoes it mean "took my hair out of the haircut"? (i.e. ruined her haircut she'd made for the accasion)Thanks. I would guess that she has either undone a braid or removed some hair extensions. I.e., "take out your hair" is not a common expression? The slangy spelling ruff for rough is not appropriate in formal writing, but your spelling-checker wont flag it because ruff has a traditional meaning of its own, denoting a frilled collar.Back to list of errors BUY THE BOOK! Hi, I was reading a short story in the American literary magazine Ruminare, and found the following sentence:I rustle my hair, trying to dry it. Is it ok to "rustle" one's hair (or someone else's)? I haven't seen this construction before.Thank you! It sounds strange to me - I would have suggested the author was perhaps confusing it with 'ruffle', but since it's in an American literary magazine, I guess it must be OK.In AE, at least, I'm thinking the author might have used it for effect, but to me "rustle" is primarily about sound . . . . Hm, I ruffled my hair just now and it did rustle!! Yes, that sounds plausible. (I haven't enough hair to ruffle, or rustle.) rustleverb (used with object), rustled, rustling.4.to move or stir so as to cause a rustling sound:The wind rustled the leaves.A less common usage, yes, but it looks okay to me. A less common usage, yes, but it looks okay to me. The main problem for me is that writer is talking about wet hair. Dry leaves make a rustling sound. Wet leaves would neither blow nor rustle. It's an indie magazine that accepts submissions from readers, so... The main problem for me is that writer is talking about wet hair. Dry leaves make a rustling sound. Wet leaves would neither blow nor rustle. That's a bit of a non sequitur. don't you think? Hair and leaves are not the same thingjust because "A" will only rustle when it is wet does not mean "B" will act the same way. There is no "dryness" inherent in the word. Hello,What's the meaning of the verb ruf or ruff? The sentence is: "... George said, ruffing Pete's hair".Thank you very much I guess "ruffling". - to ruffle. Oui, 'en lui bouriffant les cheveux' Ruffling or ruffling someone's hair is a very patronising gesture done by an older person - not usually liked or appreciated by the younger participant in this process. Dated? What would be a more modern way to say this, guillaume? (Personally I don't find it dated.)[...] Last edited: Aug 19, 2019 Thanks! To ruf is possible or it is necessary to write ruff with 2 f? Perhaps ruff would be the abbreviation of ruffle? I would mostly likely use the verb "muss" instead (and Canadian Oxford Dictionary actually concurs!). I limit "ruffling" to feathers, and "ruffs" to starched pleated collars worn by choirboys.Itsi's suggestion bouriffer is surely correct, though. Last edited by a moderator: Aug 19, 2019 [...]I have never heard of 'ruffling' except in the context of winning a trick at bridge by playing a trump. Last edited by a moderator: Aug 19, 2019 Dated? What would be a more modern way to say this, guillaume? (Personally I don't find it dated.)I see the gesture as often intended with affection-but that's just one more perspective... [...]More modern would be running your fingers through his/her hair in an affectionate way -but that could still be misinterpreted! Last edited by a moderator: Aug 19, 2019 Also possible are to rough up = to mess up, to ruffle up someone's hair (or feathers), to muss up someone's hair, to ruff up someone's hair (usually negative). Understanding the difference between rough and ruff can enhance clarity in communication. Rough is commonly used to describe a surface that is uneven or irregular, often to the touch, or to describe a general concept of difficulty or lack of refinement. On the other hand, ruff refers to an item of clothing a stiff, frilled or pleated fabric collar or is used as a playful representation of the bark of a dog.The word rough is used to describe surfaces with an irregular or jagged texture. It can also reference conceptual challenges, indicating something that is crude or unrefined. It is often used in a variety of contexts, from physical descriptions to metaphorical language.Examples of rough in a sentenceHe struggled to shave with the rough blade, leaving his skin irritated.The team's rough start to the season was filled with unexpected challenges.You need to sand the wood down to eliminate the rough edges.The term ruff is used to either indicate a historic piece of the wardrobe or imitate the sound made by a dog. It's a specific word with limited, but distinctive usage, typically referring to the past when it comes to clothing or to denote dog sounds in a playful and lighthearted context.Examples of ruff in a sentenceThe portrait displayed a nobleman adorned with an elaborate ruff around his neck.When the children played fetch, the family dog would happily ruff in excitement.In the costume shop, she found a ruff that completed her Elizabethan ensemble.Rough definition:Rough is an adjective characterized by an uneven or irregular surface; not polished or smooth. It can also signify a turbulent or harsh situation, a crude or unfinished appearance, or difficult and challenging circumstances.Rough parts of speech:As an adjective: The carpenter felt the rough texture of the lumber.As a noun: The boat rocked wildly on the rough of the sea.Rough pronunciation:Rough is pronounced as /rʌ/, rhyming with 'tough'.Ruff definition:Ruff, as a noun, refers to a stiffly starched frilled or pleated circular collar made of fabric that was worn in the 16th and 17th centuries. Alternatively, it is an onomatopoeic word imitative of the bark of a dog.Ruff parts of speech:As a noun (clothing): The tailored costume included a ruff to give authenticity to the look.As an onomatopoeia: The small terrier went 'ruff, ruff' at the mail carrier passing by.Ruff pronunciation:Ruff is pronounced as /rʌ/, identical in pronunciation to 'rough' While rough and ruff are homophones, sounding identical, they belong to completely different contexts. Rough is an adjective expressing texture or metaphorical struggle, while ruff is a noun for a historic collar or an expressive dog sound. Understanding their meanings, parts of speech, and proper usage is vital to prevent confusion and maintain clear communication.Make sure your vocabulary is on point and every punctuation mark is in the right place, no matter where youre working. Hi, Some strands of hair on top of her head have fallen out of place and in front of her face.In this context, do we say hair ON her face?Thank you very much. In this context, do we say hair ON her face? What is an example sentence, using that phrase? The sentence needs to distinguish between:- hair growing from her face (not this meaning)- hair physically located on her face (the meaning here) She was tortured by the police. Her hair was not tidy, some of which hung down on her face. I'd use "over" in that case. Yes, I'd definitely say 'over', which doesn't suggest a moustache. I heard people saying ruff a lot of times on YouTube. I think this word has a lot of meaning. What does ruff mean?See a translationHide translation Show originalHide original [News] Hey you! Thread starter iaatf Start date Feb 25, 2014 Ruff is a slang term that refers to something rough, tough, or aggressive. It is often used in the context of physical altercations or violent behavior. The term can also be used to describe someone who is uncivilized or lacking in social graces. Ruff is typically associated with masculinity and is often used by men to assert dominance or intimidate others.The origins of the term are unclear, but it may have originated from the word "rough," which has a similar meaning. Ruff is commonly used in urban communities and is often associated with gang culture and street violence. It is frequently used in hip-hop music and other forms of popular culture.The term ruff can also be used to describe a dog breed known for its aggressive and territorial nature. These dogs are often trained for fighting and are illegal in many countries due to their dangerous nature.In some contexts, ruff can be used as a compliment, particularly in the context of sports or physical competition. For example, a basketball player might be described as "ruff" if they play aggressively and dominate their opponents.However, the use of the term ruff is often considered offensive and derogatory, particularly when used to describe individuals or groups of people. It reinforces harmful stereotypes about masculinity and promotes violent behavior. Its use should be avoided in polite company and in professional settings.Overall, ruff is a term with complex and often negative connotations. While it may have some positive uses in certain contexts, it is generally considered offensive and should be used with caution. - "I can't believe that ruff guy got away with stealing from the store again." - "That politician is a complete idiot, what a f***ing moron." - "I'm not going to that ruff party, those people are all a**holes." - "That movie was absolute garbage, what a waste of f***ing time." - "This weather is so s***ty, it's raining cats and dogs out here." Examples have not been reviewed.I mean, first of all, he should be saying, "I ruff you."Primero que nada, debera decir: "Te Amo. Guau "
