

Click Here

Hayward, Wisconsin is a city with a unique community where superior schools, high quality public services, a wide range of employment, and broad based commercial services all help to create a highly desirable city to families and businesses alike. The parks and natural landscape provides space for recreation as well as connecting neighborhoods that are safe and attractive.City Hall Contact Information:Hours: Monday ~ Friday 8:00 AM to 4:00 PMClosed on HolidaysTelephone: 715-634-2311Fax: 715-634-5868Address: P.O. Box 96915889 W 3rd St, Hayward, WI 54843 The Hayward Chamber of Commerce is a dynamic network of business leaders, community partners, and civic advocates dedicated to making Hayward a great place to live, work, and do business.We champion the voice of local business through bold leadership, meaningful programs, and responsive advocacy. Our strategic focus is guided by four core values: Listen to our members to anticipate and meet their evolving needs.Reimagine what a Chamber can be.Innovate with technology and data to build stronger connections and smarter solutions.Steward our resources responsibly to ensure lasting value for our members and community. The City of Hayward began accepting applications last week for grant funding and permits to hold public Special Events in Hayward during the new fiscal year that started on July 1. Last year, the City introduced a new system to streamline, customize and make more accessible and transparent City processes for awarding grants, determining permit requirements and...Read more Page 2 December 10, 2024 August 7, 2023 February 24, 2021 February 9, 2021 January 26, 2021 November 21, 2020 October 23, 2020 October 20, 2020 September 8, 2020 January 14, 2020 Our network of certified personnel can help you build your pool, recommend a product, repair a faulty product, and test your water. Find a professional near you. Our rundown below is just a glimpse into the City's past. For a deep dive into Hayward's history, art and culture, visit the Hayward Area Historical Society online (and in person!).The OhloneBefore the appearance of the Spanish padres and the founding of Mission San Jose, the Hayward area was occupied by the Ohlone and Yrgin Indians for some 3,000 years. They lived in cone-shaped straw and mud huts, coming down from the hills to the bay to gather shellfish and hunt sea lions.Rancho San LorenzoIn 1843, the Mexican government granted soldier and surveyor Guillermo Castro almost 27,000 acres of land stretching from the Bay to beyond the hills, including present-day Castro Valley, Hayward, and San Lorenzo. Castro named the area Rancho San Lorenzo and settled on the site of historic City Hall on Mission Boulevard. Castro's personal corral still exists today as the City's Heritage Plaza and Arboretum.Haywards HotelOn his way from gold country to San Francisco in 1851,a failed prospector named William Hayward passed through Castros land. Hayward liked what he saw and purchased several acres of land from Castro in what is now downtown Hayward. In 1852, Hayward set up a small general store at the corner of A Street and Mission Boulevard.The store became a major stop on the road from Oakland to San Jose, due in no small part to Hayward's position as Road Commissioner of Alameda County. Hayward expanded his business, erecting a lodging house that grew to become the famous Haywards Hotel. Unfortunately for Castro, squatters, lawsuits and financial misfortune forced him to mortgage his ranch until finally in 1864 the remaining acreage was seized by the county to pay his debts and auctioned off for $30,000. Castro moved his family to South America and never returned.The First Great San Francisco EarthquakeOn the morning of October 21, 1868, the Southern segment of the Hayward Fault ruptured, triggering a M7.0 earthquake that was felt as far away as Nevada. Nearly every building in the Hayward area was destroyed or significantly damaged in the earthquake, including some buildings that were rolled onto their sides by the ground movement. The 1868 Hayward Quake was known as the "great San Francisco earthquake" until 1906.The Heart of the Garden of EdenIn the late 1800s, fruit orchards, cattle ranches, stores and other businesses proliferated on what had been Castro's land. In the early decades of the 20th Century, the Hayward Area became known as the Heart of the Garden of Eden because of its temperate climate and fertile soil. Everything produce, chickens, cattle, flowers grew in abundance. By 1950, Hayward, grown to a population of 14,000, had become the Apricot City and home to Hunts Cannery.From a Town to a CityWhen the town was incorporated on March 11, 1876, it was officially named Haywards after the landmark hotel. The s was dropped several years later. Haywards climate, soil, and perfect location in the heart of the Bay Area have spurred tremendous growth for decades. Following World War II, housing developments began replacing farms and ranches. Between 1950 and 1960, the population increased fivefold from 14,000 to 72,000, and has continued to grow ever since. Today, Hayward is home to the second-most diverse population in California, one of the nation's first annual gay proms, the state's first Japanese garden, and the longest-running Battle of the Bands in America.Hayward TodayWith 150,000 residents, today the City of Hayward is the sixth-largest city in the Bay Area and a thriving regional center of commerce, manufacturing activity and trade. Known as the "Heart of the Bay," Hayward has capitalized on its unparalleled location to become one of the most desirable business locations for companies in advanced industries. The City continues to plan for the future, maintaining a balance between the needs of our diverse residents and a growing business community. The City works hard to balance the needs of our growing population with the preservation of open space and an aggressive economic development strategy.A perfect day in Hayward takes you from the hills to the shoreline with innumerable delights in between.Start your day with a ridgehike at sunrise with 360 degree views of the entire Bay Area. Challenge yourself at one of three quality golf courses showcasing the regions unique topography. Enjoy an early dinner at one of the United States first brewpubs, then walk a few steps for a different kind of Zen meditation in Californias oldest Japanese garden. Wend your way back through a historic downtown with buildings that trace their roots back to the 1860s, then spend the twilight strolling along the pristine shoreline, surrounded by native wildlife as the sun dips below the San Francisco skyline on the horizon. Hayward, California, is an affordable and convenient base that lets you explore every nook of the Bay Area with ease. Youre close to the water here on the East Bay and the Hayward Hills behind the city offer a clear panorama that captures San Francisco, Fremont, Silicon Valley and Oakland with one memorable view.The choice of days out is way too long to list, but for starters you can see San Franciscos famous sights, tour prestigious universities, sample high-tech life in Silicon Valley or soak up the beautiful natural scenery around the bay. Lets explore the best things to do in Hayward!1. Hayward Japanese GardensSource: Conrad Moore / shutterstockHayward Japanese GardensRight in Haywards hectic downtown is this sanctuary where you can take a minute to reflect. The Japanese Garden was the Bay Areas first to be designed according to strict traditional guidelines.Typical for this style of garden the beds with 70 different tree and plant species have been meticulously tended to resemble miniature landscapes and on a visit youll pass through pavilions, cross a bridge over a koi pond fed by a waterfall and see a Japanese teahouse.The detail is impressive even the wood grain of gardens structures has been carefully notched to give the impression of great age. 2. Garin Regional ParkSource: yheflman / shutterstockGarin Regional ParkBay residents have been coming to these hills from miles around for at least a hundred years, especially in the evenings when the sun sets over the west bay.There was once a ranch here before owner Andrew J. Garin sold his tract of undulating land to the district. You can still amble through the ranchs former orchards and in autumn theres an apple festival, celebrating the harvest with games, apple tasting sessions and live bands.The grassy hills rise above 500 metres and the special views from these peaks incorporate all of the Bay Area.3. Local cuisineSource: wee deizin / shutterstockRestaurantHayward is a little less fashionable than some neighbouring communities, but more than holds its own for culinary options.On the streets youll notice just what a melting pot Hayward is, a quality reflected by the choice of restaurants. The Mexican taquerias are particularly good, but you can also tuck into Korean barbecue, Vietnamese, Japanese or classic American diner food. 4. Hayward Regional ShorelineSource: Jonathan Percy / shutterstockHayward Regional ShorelineYouve seen the hills, now its time to explore the shore. This stretch of the East Bay is a salt marsh ecosystem supporting abundant birdlife.Borrow some binoculars from the Hayward Shoreline Interpretive Center for your walk and see if you can glimpse the likes of double-crested cormorants and long-billed curlews.For a long time the Haywards shore farmed for sail but in the 80s it was restored as a wetlands to bring wildlife back to this part of the East Bay.The San Francisco Bay Trail runs right through the park, so if you feel like a longer walk venture for a few miles along this 345-mile path curving around two thirds of the Bay. 5. Mural Arts Program of HaywardSource: jay galvin / Flickr | CC BYMural Art in HaywardFor many years Hayward had a bit of a graffiti problem. So back in 2008 the city decided to beat the taggers at their own game: They picked all the walls and pillars that would usually fall prey to vandalism and invited artists to paint their own eye-catching murals on them instead.The money the city would otherwise have spent painting over and removing graffiti they diverted into commissions.So on a walk around the downtown youll view some inspired artwork on the sides of buildings and otherwise empty spaces.6. Don Castro Regional Recreation AreaSource: LOGVINYUK YULIA / shutterstockBeachA peaceful natural partition between Hayward and the adjacent Castro Valley, this mini wilderness is loved for its lagoon hidden within the woodland. In the summer the lagoons clear waters are a great way to cool off and for most of the perimeter theres a sandy beach.If youre here in the evenings and have the patience youll see deer and raccoons creeping out of the treeline to drink at the lagoon.You can rent a boat on the shore, and anglers come to Don Castro throughout the year to catch catfish, bass and trout. 7. Sulphur Creek Nature CenterSource: boingr / Flickr | CC BY-SA Sulphur Creek Nature CenterA free attraction in one of Haywards green spaces, this wildlife rehabilitation centre will impart valuable lessons to kids about the natural world.At least 900 animals are treated here every year, and theyre kept in open enclosures so you can get up close and observe them. Typically youll see eagles, gray foxes, rattlesnakes and long-toed salamanders.Friendly staff and volunteers are happy to pass on their expertise and children can see the animals being fed and handled. The setting is also part of the charm Sulphur Creek is in a deep wooded valley that feels more remote than five minutes from downtown Hayward.8. San LeandroSource: Matt Gush / shutterstockSan Leandro, CaliforniaSan Leandro is the next community up from Hayward and goes all the way back to 1872 truly historic for a Californian city. The community grew around the oyster beds on the bayfront, which at their height made up the largest oyster fishery in the Americas.In the 20th Century the waters became too polluted to sustain healthy oysters and the industry faded away. The site of the oyster beds is protected today as a California Historical Landmark.Also historic is Casa Peralta, an early 20th century mansion designed in the colonial style and maintained by the city as a museum. Its a handsome nod to Californias Latin heritage. 9. FremontSource: SnapASkyline / shutterstockMission San JoseThis community to the south preserves its own slice of Californias early past. Mission San Jose is one of an array of catholic buildings scattered across the state.This one was ordained way back in 1797 and although it sustained damage in a 19th-century earthquake the exquisite whitewashed adobe church was faithfully restored.A blast from the past of a different kind can be found at Ardenwood Historic Farm. Little has changed at this working farm in more than a century the same crops are sewn and harvested in the same way they were in the 1800s.10. OaklandSource: Sundry Photography / shutterstockOakland, CaliforniaA city that has changed a great deal recently, Oakland long fought a reputation as San Franciscos gritty neighbour but these days things are on the up and you should come for the outstanding food.The city has always been very diverse and if you head downtown youll be overwhelmed by the choice of international cuisines. The oriental food is incredible Cambodian, Cantonese, Vietnamese, Indian and Cambodian restaurants all tempt the taste buds.For a look at Oaklands waterfront roots get to Jack London Square, named after the writer and set at the core of the citys wharf district. 11. Palo AltoSource: Sundry Photography / shutterstockPalo AltoNear the base of the San Francisco peninsula is a dynamic urban area adjacent to both Stanford University and Silicon Valley, so you wont be shocked to learn that this is one of the most educated places in the country.Stanford provides Palo Alto with some great attractions, such as the Cantor Arts Centers Outdoor Sculpture, a garden with 20 works by the sculptor Auguste Rodin, the largest collection of his pieces outside Paris.In Silicon Valley you could make for the Intel Museum to go behind the scenes at the worlds largest chipmaker.12. San JoseSource: mTaira / shutterstockSan Jose, California Its not hard to find the way to San Jose from Hayward; it cant be more than a few miles down the shoreline! San Jose also includes a big portion of Silicon Valley, making it one of the richest and most expensive cities in America.On Fridays and Saturdays come to browse the first-class farmers market, and any day of the week is a fine time to check out Japantown where the restaurants are superb.Santana Row is a sophisticated retail area with eateries and European-style local shops, favoured by San Joses trendier residents.Finally for a dose of edutainment take a look at the interactive Tech Museum of Innovation, showing the application of technology in day-to-day life. 13. San FranciscoSource: IM_photo / shutterstockSan FranciscoThe heavyweight of the bay area, theres nowhere quite like San Francisco. Youll know the steep streets, painted lady houses and streetcars from untold films and TV shows.And of course the big landmarks like Alcatraz, the Golden Gate Bridge and Chinatown are all essential for sightseeing and facebook albums.Join the tourist trail down at Fishermans Wharf, the historic fishing district, to get some fresh crab or clam chowder.San Franciscos reputation for enlightenment extends to its excellent museums, covering every topic from Asian art to the distinctive cable-cars that rattle up and down the citys slopes.14. BerkeleySource: Sundry Photography / shutterstockBerkeleyAlso on the Bays east shore, just a few miles past Oakland youll come to a city synonymous with its university.This institution is responsible for many of the citys best attractions. Take the University of California Botanical Garden, a fantastic 34-acre park with one of the USAs most varied plant collections. The gardens date back to 1890 and the 12,000 plant species here are arranged by their geographical region.The restaurants in Berkeley are also superb; the city pioneered the idea of a native Californian cuisine and world-famous Chez Panisse opened here in 1971, inspiring a culinary tradition that cherishes the freshness and provenance of its ingredients. 15. Napa ValleySource: Michael Warwick / shutterstockNapa ValleyNorth of the Bay Area is Americas foremost wine region. The Napa Valley has upwards of 400 wineries, nourished by a climate almost identical to Europes Mediterranean regions.The scenery is lovely of course, with vine-draped hillsides and valleys cradling the rustic barns and stone houses of farm wineries.The award-winning wines of the Napa Valley have given rise to a whole culture that celebrates the best things in life good wine needs to be paired with good food, so the dining scene is fantastic, and there are great golf courses, spas and all sorts of opportunities to set off to revel in the bucolic countryside. Muir Woods National MonumentPoints of Interest & LandmarksOakland Temple Visitors' CenterPalace of Fine Arts TheatreCalifornia Academy of SciencesObservation Decks & Towers

Hayward maxflo vs variable speed pump. Hayward super pump vs super pump 2. Hayward super pump vs max flo xl. Hayward maxflo vs.

- rhyme scheme 4th grade
- bryce harper number
- approaches to leadership traits
- https://mavieromantique.com/images/files/99499566407.pdf
- what was the main causes of ww1
- http://www.eventia.tn/ckeditor/kcfinder/upload/files/lobowakit_kefuvuso.pdf