The film is 106 minutes long. See Production, Box Office, and Society InfoJewish-American Jonathan Safran Foer is a memorabilia collector of his family, although most of the elements, some of which are taken without asking, would not be considered memories from the average person. He puts most of these elements in the individual Ziploc bags, and hangs them on the wall of the memory of him through the photograph of the person to those who are more associated. He has this constrictin, in an attempt to remember. He is able to tie a photograph he receives from his grandmother, Sabine Foer, on the bed of death - is his grandfather, Safran Foer, during the war in Ukraine, and a young woman will learn the name Agostino - again At a pendant he stole from his grandfather on the death bed, in 1989, the pendant of a grassed glass grasshopper. Learn that agostine some way saved leads his grandfather's life to Jonathan to go to a mission to discover the story at the source in which photography was taken, in a now non-existent city and probably largely forgotten called Trachimbrod who is Shave to the ground from the Nazis during the war, armed only with his limited knowledge, the pendant, star of David grandfather's necklace, photography, "money" tip, and an old map and mostly obsolete. Before arriving in Ukraine, Jonathan prepares Odessa's driving services based on Heritage Tours, which specializes in helping Jewish expatriates discover their past. The company is of own property and managed by three generations of the Alexander family because they generally think Jewish people are stupid for wanting to revisit their past. A young jewish rap pop lover, whose broken English will have enough for translation, Jonathan will learn that the guides of him are a loving but dysfunctional lot that he has little interest to help him get the money of him. But during their time together, this research will influence Jonathan, grandfather and Alex in different ways, all linked to the value of the memory.
